Height: 8-15 inches Weight: 8-25 lbs Lifetime: 14-16 years Colors: White, blue, pied, red, brown, black Suitable for: Rural families, those looking for a compact guard dog Temperament: Loyal, smart, playful, high-energy, vocal You know that every dog named after Teddy Roosevelt will be witty and persistent, and the Teddy Terrier Roosevelt is certainly no exception. Teddy Roosevelt Terrier is similar to the American rat terrier, except that it is a little bigger and more muscular. These dogs are bred to serve on farms, and can do a little of everything, including eliminating pests, clocking over property, and game hunting. Despite their relatively small size, these dogs are absolutely fearless, just like their namesake. However, they are not as well known, so if you want to know more about these rough animals, the guide below will let you know everything you need to know. Teddy Roosevelt Terrier Puppies – Before you buy Teddy Roosevelt Terriers are fun and adorable dogs, but not for everyone. It's important to remember that they are bred for use on farms, so they may not be the best choice for cramped apartments. They may be a bit of a handful, but they are more than worth it as they are silly and lovable. That doesn't mean you have to bring a house without doing your research, though. If you are not prepared for the demands these dogs will make on your lifestyle, the partnership might not work out for each of you. Energy Life Health Capacity Sociability What is the Price of Teddy Roosevelt Terrier Puppies? While you can find a wide variety of terriers in most shelters, you'll probably have to go through a breeder if you're hoping to get a blood-filled Teddy Roosevelt Terrier. Fortunately, they are not as expensive as many other thoroughbred dogs. You can probably find one for between $600-900, although it's possible that you might find one for cheaper. Don't focus on bargain-basement prices, though. If you find one for much less than the price shown above, there is a good chance that you will be looking at a puppy mill or backyard breeder. You're better off paying the standard price instead of risking bringing home a battered dog. If you have the opportunity, visit the breeder in person to see how dogs are treated. You want to make sure that they are confident and outgoing and that their environment is well maintained. Staff, aggression or impurity are all great warning signs. You can also have luck finding a puppy through a rescue team. 3 Little-known facts about Teddy Roosevelt Terriers 1. Teddy Roosevelt Likely Never really one of these dogs The breed bearing his name has never had the pleasure of his company. In fact, Roosevelt never possessed any kind of Rat Terrier nor played any role in the development of the tribe. He had a Manchester Terrier named Jack, however. He also owned another dog called Scamp that was used to hunt rats in the White House; because of this, a lot of people That he had rat terriers. No one knows what kind of pooch Scamp was, though. 2. It's great truffle Hunters Teddy Roosevelt Terrier is great at finding truffles. The incredible sense of smell allows them to dig up black truffles with ease, even when they are buried several feet underground. Of course, it also means it's great at finding just about anything that hides underground, so don't be surprised if your puppy brings home a rat or gopher every now and then. 3. Teddy Roosevelt Terrier Mature Late These dogs are not considered fully mature until they reach two or three years old. As a result, they maintain their playful puppy spirit more than many other breeds. The downside to this is that training can be a pain. They would rather play than do anything else, but with enough time and dedication, these puppies can be taught to do almost anything. Picture: adrieknitter, Shutterstock Temperament & Intelligence of Teddy Roosevelt Terrier Teddy Roosevelt Terrier is fun-loving and affectionate, and is always up for a game. They absolutely love being around their people and will often shade them wherever they go. Despite their lovable and welcoming nature, they are natural guard dogs. He'll sound the alarm if someone comes in, and he won't back down from an intruder. This is a dog that will give their lives to protect you without a second thought. They're smart and single-minded. If they decide to track down or chase something, it's almost impossible to get them to give up. As a result, you may have problems training them if you can't fully engage their attention. These dogs are also prone to getting into harm's way. They love to dig, and they will make fun of them, even if it means taking away your furniture. It's important to keep them exhausted and busy. The good news is that they will keep your backyard free from almost any pest you can think of. Rats, gophers, squirrels, and other small animals don't have a chance against these determined hunters. Are these dogs good for families? 🐾 Teddy Roosevelt Terriers love people of all ages. They get along famously with the kids as they have a really bottomless appetite for the game. Unlimited energy levels allow them to keep up with the little ones throughout the day as well. They tend to shade their people wherever they go, so they can make excellent escorts for the little ones. These terriers are small enough that small children can pet them easily, and know how to mitigate their playing style to the appropriate level for their companions. It's better if it's brought up with children rather than brought in as mature adults, however. They can be territorial and protective of the main which can cause problems as they adapt to their new environment. Teddy Roosevelt Terriers may not be ideal for older or just owners, however, giving them the stimulation they need can sometimes be a huge task. They thrive when they have a lot of people to play with or a demanding job to Does this breed get along with other pets? These puppies usually tolerate other dogs well, especially if they have been raised with them. Any aggression problems can be mitigated by spaying or sterilizing them when they are still young. Their territorial nature means they may not be friendly to strange dogs, however. It's best to keep them safely fenced-in, and always keep them on a leash in public. They can't do well in dog parks either, as they will probably spend more time guarding their people than playing with friends. If you train and socialize them extensively, they may be able to coexist with cats, gerbils, and other small critters. However, keep in mind that they were bred to hunt small animals like these, and it will take a lot of effort to overcome their natural planning. You'd better not take any chances. Things to know when owning a Teddy Roosevelt Terrier Teddy Roosevelt Terrier are similar to Rat Terriers in terms of property requirements, but they come with their own unique set of challenges as well. Below, we list a few things to keep in mind when deciding whether to adopt one of these dogs. Food and nutrition requirements dogs are not terribly big, so they shouldn't eat you out of the house and home. A cup or two of high quality dog food every day should do the trick. Given their extremely high energy levels, it is best to feed these dogs a high protein croquette. Look for one filled with meat, as this will give your dog the slow burning energy they need to stay active throughout the day. Avoid all kinds of animal by-products, as these are made with meat that should have been thrown away. Watch out for ingredients like corn, wheat, and soy, as these are filled with empty calories. Small dogs like Teddy Roosevelt Terriers can be particularly susceptible to obesity, so it's important to make every calorie count. You can give these dogs some treats, especially while training, but be careful not to go overboard. Often value praise as much as a cookie, anyway. If you live in a rural area, you should be careful that your Teddy Roosevelt Terrier does not supplement their diet with the animals we've caught. While it can be difficult to stop them from catching prey, it is important to do so as many wild animals carry a variety of diseases. Exercise 🐾 is not a question with these dogs – it's going to get plenty of it. The question is whether it will be directed by you or something they provide themselves. One hour of intense activity a day is the absolute minimum. These pooches put in a whole day of work on the farm, so there is little chance that it will push them beyond their means. If you don't give them all the activity they need, they'll burn their energy any way they can. This usually involves digging holes in your yard or tearing up your most valuable possessions, so it's important to make sure your dog is tucked out every day. Their muscular, compact bodies make them naturally natural and excel in agility training and other canine sports. These dogs can jump and catch frisbees, swim all day, or accompany you on a long run. They won't complain and they won't quit before you. Training 🐾 It is important to train your Teddy Roosevelt Terrier early and often, and proper socialization is also necessary. If they are not well trained, these dogs can become threats, destroying tons of property and chasing anything that moves. Fortunately, it is quite easy to train and tend to enjoy it. Anything that causes them both physically and mentally is often welcomed by these dogs, so they will receive all the obedience work you can give them. One of the most important commands you can teach them is leave it. This comes in especially handy if they see a squirrel or other animal in need of hunting, as they will follow it to the ends of the Earth if left to their own devices. They respond better to positive reinforcement, as punishment often forces them to dig in their heels. You will save time and frustration of both, encouraging positive behavior and ignoring the negatives. If you are not sure of your training skills, then by all means, hire a professional instructor. These dogs also do well in group classes, but only if they have been socialized to be tolerant of other newborns. View this post on Instagram A post shared by B Deesy (@cassadagus) Grooming > They short, bristly coats require little maintenance, so owning one of these dogs isn't much of a troyance in the regard. At most, you should brush them every week or so. A soft brush should be sufficient to knock off the upper layer of fur. Their teeth should be brushed and their nails cut regularly, although the latter may not be necessary, as they often archive them during their normal day. You will need to clean out their ears with a wet cotton ball once a week or so to prevent infections. These dogs are not prone to odors necessarily, but their strange nature often causes them to find messy situations – which they then roll around in. As a result, you may need to bathe them more often than other dogs, but only if necessary. Health conditions 🐾 Teddy Roosevelt Terriers are generally healthy dogs, especially if you keep their weight in check. There are a few things to be aware of, though, such as: Male vs Female Both sexes are quite asymmetric in terms of appearance, although males can be an inch or two taller and a couple of pounds heavier. While both sexes mature slowly compared to other breeds, females generally come into their own faster than This makes them easier to train, especially when they're young. Males will be more likely to cling to your side wherever you go. The ladies also want to be around you, but often they will do their own thing in your general area, while the boys have to be involved in what you do. Teddy Roosevelt Terrier's final thoughts are as witty and determined as the President they were named And these high-energy dogs are sure to bring your life to life. Owning one is not for everyone, though, as their extreme exercise needs and strong predator movement can make them a handful for inexperienced owners. If you're up to the task, though, you'll be hard-pressed to find a more loyal or fun-loving dog. They'll put a smile on your face every day - at least until you see what they did on your doorstep.
